INTRODUCTORY NOTE

The matter comprised in the following pages has been segregated from a large mass of genealogical material concerning the Motts of New York and New England that has been gathered by the writer during the last fifteen years with the intention of publishing a comprehensive history of the descendants of ADAM MOTT of Hempstead.

With this end in view, in 1899, a brief sketch of the earlier generations of the Long Island family was published by him in pamphlet form, followed by a second, in 1906, somewhat amplified in its scope, both intended to arouse interest in the subject, and to enlist the co-operation of those allied by blood and marriage. To the edition of 1906 the reader is referred for a more extended account of the Hempstead patriarch and his ten sons than it is pertinent to include in this publication. The descendants of two of the younger sons have been indicated in detail by Cornell in his very interesting book, "Adam and Anne Mott." The descent in the male lines from another son has been given by the writer in volume xxxvi of the "New York Genealogical and Biographical Record" (1905). And in the September, 1906, number of the "Genealogical Exchange" (Buffalo, N. Y.), may be found a condensed sketch of the Dutchess County branch descended from one of the older sons, that was early established in Nine Partners, and at the close of the Revolutionary War, for political causes, removed to the Canadian line.

Since the publication of the 1906 edition of the pamphlet, very much matter has been collected by the writer relating to early families of the name other than that of the Hempstead settler. Of two of these, the Portsmouth, R. I., and the Scituate, Mass., families, brief mentions are made in the following pages. Early in the Colonial period, following the natural trend of migration, scions of both of these races, apparently more enterprising in spirit, distributed themselves along the Connecticut seaboard, merging with those from the more conservative Long Island stock who had crossed the Sound. So that, by the middle of the eighteenth century, southern New England and New York, together with New Jersey, had become the home of numerous Motts whose origin it is well nigh impossible at this time to determine without a somewhat comprehensive study of all the groups. The enterprise has proved so formidable in its character that its consummation has been delayed much beyond anticipation, and must be the writer's explanation for issuing at this time, in advance of the completed whole, this account of one of the Dutchess County families.

FAMILY HISTORY

It was in or about the year 1762 that JAMES MOTT removed with his family from Long Island, in the State of New York, to the Nine Partners Patent in Dutchess County, on the east side of the Hudson River. A journey of seventy-five miles "as the crow flies," with wife and at least five young children, and with the personal effects of a household—dependent on the slow progress of an ox-drawn farm wagon—was no trifling undertaking. The course was probably to Hempstead Harbor, on the Sound, thence by barge across water to a suitable landing place, perhaps at New Rochelle, from which the long and tedious march proceeded over the hills, through the farms and woods the length of Westchester County, to its destination within the bounds of the Nine Partners Patent. The family, at the time of the migration, was made up of the father, James Mott, then in his thirty-ninth year, his wife Anna, thirty-four, James, hardly twelve, John, nine, Jemima, seven, Zebulon, five, and Anna, two. If Jesse were born at the time, he could have been but a babe in arms. The Nine Partners Patent was already the home of more than one household of Motts. Two years earlier, Joseph, the grandson of the patriarch of the Long Island family, ADAM MOTT, with two sons already at man's estate, had settled in Crom Elbow Precinct, on the banks of the Hudson, and but ten miles distant from the spot that was to become the home of James and Anna. Back, among the hills had gathered a little colony of Long Island and Connecticut families, sturdy, industrious farming people, not a few belonging to the community of Friends. The place was at almost the geographical centre of Dutchess County, in the region drained by the tributaries of Wappinger Creek, that itself tumbles into the great river below Poughkeepsie, and in a precinct that subsequently (in 1788) became the township of Washington. The neighborhood had been settled as early as 1750, and the presence of a Rogers family there, possibly relatives of Anna, may have been a controlling reason in the selection of the Mott home. The settlement, now known as Mechanic, was on the direct road that ran from the river to the State line. Here Samuel Mabbett about that year, 1760, built a store; later a Friends' Meeting House was erected, and that was followed by the famous Nine Partners School, opened in 1796. The Mott farm was on the south side of the road mentioned. Here James Mott and his wife Anna passed the rest of their days. Other children came to them, Rhoda, Samuel, Martha and Deborah, the last born only four months before the father died in 1770, at the age of 47. Tradition is silent concerning the characters of James and Anna Mott, but the lives led by their sons and grandsons bear eloquent testimony to the moral and Christian atmosphere that pervaded the household. The father's death left heavy burdens upon the widow. James, the eldest son, had just passed his twentieth birthday, and was to be her mainstay in the management of the farm. John, the next, was but seventeen, and Jemima fifteen, the others, seven in number, all too young to be of service, and all needing a mother's watchful care. The first break in the family circle, following the father's death, was the taking away of the little child Deborah, who died two years later. Then came the years of anxiety and unrest, when rumors of wars penetrated even to this peace loving community. The stripping Zebulon, entered the service of the State and did duty on the river in skirmishes with the Tories, and in the efforts of the militia in the prevention of reinforcements reaching Burgoyne. In 1780 John married, and the next year Zebulon followed his example. In 1783 Jesse left the family home and went north to Saratoga County where he soon married and settled. In 1791 Zebulon followed his brother to Saratoga, and in 1804 John removed to Coeymans. Four years later, James died, leaving a widow and nine children, of whom the boy Denton, the eldest, was but nineteen; the children of this family, with their mother, in course of time, went away from Washington, leaving there, of the original household, only Samuel, the youngest son of James and Anna, who continued to occupy the farm which had been his father's, augmented by subsequent purchases of his own, until his death in 1830. In 1831 Samuel's widow and children sold the estate then consisting of 147½ acres, and the last descendants in the male line of James and Anna Mott passed out of the history of Dutchess County.

The fortunes of the several sons of the family may be followed in the pages of this Genealogy. It is a subject of deep regret to the writer that he has been unable to discover evidence sufficient to indisputably prove the parentage of James Mott, or even to indicate with certainty the stock from which he came. The earliest contemporary record of him is found in the Huntington Church books, wherein it is written that "James Mott, Jr.," "of Hempstead," was married, Feb. 2, 1747/8, to Anna Rogers of Huntington. That this was the Dutchess County couple is established without any doubt by the family record in the hands of the Saratoga descendants. One, then, naturally turns to Hempstead for the earlier history of the family. Just what was meant by the appellation "Jr." in the marriage record is not clear. It is only evidence that an older man of the same name was a resident of the neighborhood, who may or may not have been his father, and possibly not even a relative. The record in Saratoga places his birth in Oct., 1723, and certainly there was living in Hempstead at that time, and for some years later, a James Mott, son of John, and grandson of the patriarch ADAM of Hempstead. This James was in possession of a recorded cattle mark, and occupied in 1727 land which his father had conveyed to him shortly before, adjoining his own (John's) at Near Rockaway. This is the last known of him; but in 1758 one "James Mott, Jr.," recorded a cattle mark that bore so close a relation to those of the first James and his father, John, as to make it extremely probable that they were of one family. Moreover, the names of James Mott and James, Jr., disappear from the Hempstead records after the year 1758, suggesting the death of the older man, and the removal of the younger. With the facts relating to the Dutchess County man entirely harmonizing with the assumption that he was of the ADAM MOTT stock, it will be interesting at this juncture, to briefly consider the history of the three earlier generations of that family

ADAM MOTT* had come to this country sometime before 1645, from the county of Essex, England. As in his will of 1681 he declared that he was then "about sixty years of age," it follows that 1621 was approximately the date of his birth, and that he was twenty-six when, in 1647, he married in the Dutch Church of New Amsterdam, Jane Hulet, a maid from the county of Bucks. He early removed to Long Island, eventually establishing himself on the North Shore, near the head of Hempstead Harbor, and here he ended his days, probably soon after the year 1682, leaving a widow, Elizabeth, and a large family of children. John, who was one of the sons of Jane Hulet, was born, undoubtedly on Long Island, but before Hempstead had become the family home, about the year 1658 (he was 23 in 1681). In the division of the Hempstead lands he became the owner of a large tract in the southern part of the township at what was a little later called Near Rockaway, and this was his home. He married Sarah, the daughter of Capt. John Seaman, and was living as late as 1727, when he conveyed, by deed, his homestead to his son Patrick, mentioning therein "a deed of gift bearing date with the present" of adjoining land then in the occupation of his son James. There is no record of the names and birth dates of his children, but in the original manuscript census of Hempstead, taken in 1698, they were enumerated as John, Jeames, Sarah and Martha, the last being probably very young. Patrick and Henry were born later. It is probable that "Jeames" was born between 1685 and 1690, perhaps at the earlier date, for in 1706, when he then would have been twenty-one, he recorded his cattle mark. There is no record in Hempstead of the marriage of James, nor does the christian name of his wife appear. We may surmise that he continued to occupy the farm at Near Rockaway that his father had conveyed to him by the "deed of gift". It is highly probable that he had a son of the same name who in 1758 recorded a cattle mark very similar to his own. And it is very reasonable to believe that this James, Jr., was the man who married Anna Rogers. The sale of the Long Island farm is not on record. Possibly at the time of the migration, James, the father, was still alive, for he would have been not more than seventy-seven years of age. Or, just as likely, James parted with his interest in the paternal acres to a brother or brothers who, continuing to occupy and cultivate the lands, saw no necessity for recording the instrument, even if one had been executed.

chusetts Bay Colony in 1635, and three years later removed to Portsmouth, Rhode Island. By his wife Sarah he had sons, Jacob, Eleazer and Gershom, and had brought here three older sons by a previous wife, John, Adam and Jonathan. Thompson, in his History of Long Island, makes the Hempstead Adam belong to this family, and the error has been repeated over and again by other writers.

While John Mott was mowing his salt-marsh acres at Near Rockaway, his older brother James, who had been baptized in the Dutch Church of New Amsterdam, Oct. 15, 1651, was living, in somewhat different surroundings, in Mamaroneck, across the Sound. In 1670 he married Mary Redman, the step-daughter of John Richbell, one of the leading spirits of that community, an opulent merchant who had formerly been at Charlestown, Mass., and was engaged in the shipping trade with the West Indies. The Mamaroneck Census of 1698 gave to James Mott children, then living, Elizabeth, Grace, James, Phebe and Martha. He was styled in contemporaneous records "captain," and in 1702 was a vestryman of the English church at Rye where the Episcopalians of Mamaroneck attended service. His wife Mary had died at some date prior to 1698, and he married, second, Elizabeth, to whom were granted letters of administration on his estate, Nov. 27, 1707. Of his son James but little is known. He inherited under his grandmother Richbell's will of 1700, appears as a resident of Mamaroneck from time to time, and March 27, 1735, "affirmed" as to his father's signature. This is the last known of him. A James Mott, yeoman of Mamaroneck, perhaps the same, was married at Flushing, 9th of 3d mo., 1717, to Jane Burling, who was born 17th of 5th mo., 1684, daughter of Edward and Grace, Friends. A James Mott of Mamaroneck died there 13th of 2nd mo., 1773, a member of the same persuasion, and William Sutton was constituted the administrator of his estate, but the records disclose nothing as to his identity or his heirs. It was possible, so far as the dates alone are considered, for our "James Mott, Jr.," "of Hempstead," who was born in 1723 and married Anna Rogers in Huntington in 1748, to have been the son of the second James of Mamaroneck, by his wife Jane Burling; but thus far no evidence is adduced that renders it likely. It would seem more probable that the male line of the Mamaroneck branch died out or removed. The James Mott who was living in Mamaroneck in 1814, and later, prominent as a Friend, husband of the famous Lucretia Mott, was a descendant of Adam Mott, the youngest son of the Hempstead patriarch by his last wife, and not a descendant, as has been carelessly asserted, of the earlier James of Mamaroneck.

Very little concerning the Portsmouth family has been published, and the following fragmentary notes are inserted here, because of the possibility that "James, Jr.," of Hempstead came from that race.

John,<sup>2</sup> the eldest son of Adam, born in 1621, was living in Portsmouth in 1655. Adam,<sup>2</sup> the second, born in 1623, married Mary Lott, was dead in 1710, leaving two sons, Adam,<sup>3</sup> born 1650, died unmarried, 1676, and John,<sup>3</sup> born 1670-1, who, apparently, died unmarried. Jonathan,<sup>2</sup> the third son, born in 1626, was alive in Portsmouth in 1653. Jacob,<sup>2</sup> the fourth son, born in 1633, was of Portsmouth, married Joanna Slocum, and had sons, Jacob,<sup>3</sup> born 1661, and Samuel,<sup>3</sup> born 1679. Eleazer,<sup>2</sup> the fifth son, was alive in 1661. Gershom,<sup>2</sup> the youngest, born 1635-40, was of Portsmouth, and had sons Gershom<sup>3</sup> and John.<sup>3</sup> Lines of descent from several of these men of the third generation have been traced. Their descendants were in Portsmouth, Kingston and Newport, R. I., and others moved westward along the Connecticut shore, many of them having joined the community of Friends.

Still another family of Mott, apparently not very nearly related to either of the preceding, was that of NATHANIEL, who was an early settler at Scituate and Braintree, Mass. He married, 1656, Hannah, the widow of Peter Shooter, and had sons: John,<sup>2</sup> born 1659; Nathaniel,<sup>2</sup> born 1661; Samuel,<sup>2</sup> born 1668-9; Edward,<sup>2</sup> born 1673, and Ebenezer,<sup>2</sup> born 1675. Of these John, Nathaniel and Edward settled on Block Island. John<sup>2</sup> married Mercy or Maria Tosh, and two daughters were born to them there, but nothing appears of him on the records after 1688. Nathaniel<sup>2</sup> married 1682, Hepzibah Winslow, and a second wife, 1691-2, Sarah Tosh, by whom he had sons John,<sup>3</sup> born 1700; Nathaniel,<sup>3</sup> born 1706, and Edward,<sup>3</sup> born 1709-10. Samuel,<sup>2</sup> was of Lyme, Conn., and had sons: Samuel,<sup>3</sup> born 1693-4; John,<sup>3</sup> born 1698; Experience,<sup>3</sup> born 1703-4, and Nathaniel,<sup>3</sup> born 1707. Edward<sup>2</sup> married 1695, Penelope Tosh, and died intestate 1737 (either he or his nephew of the same name was sometime at Westerly, R. I.), leaving no record of issue. Ebenezer,<sup>2</sup> the youngest son of Nathaniel, married 1700-1, Grace Vinal, had son John,<sup>3</sup> born 1707, who was the ancestor of the Motts of Boston. Male descendants of the Block Island men are still there. The line has been prolific, and not a few moved to Connecticut and Long Island towns.

While it is not impossible for our James of Hempstead to have been the son of one of the earlier wanderers from Block Island, it is more likely than not that his origin must be sought elsewhere.

Family tradition has its value, of course, but unless supported by records, should not be accepted unconditionally. It is the common belief among the descendants of the Hempstead patriarch that the family is of French Huguenot extraction, and that the name was originally De Mott or Le Mott. The De Motts of early New York and vicinity seem to have been a Dutch family, and certainly there is no evidence whatever that they were related to the English Motts of the same period. In a few instances De Motts of Hempstead and Hudson River towns have dropped the prefix, and swelled the number of nomadic Motts that are the despair of the genealogist. If there is any foundation for the Huguenot story, the exodus from France must have taken place before the period of the settlement of this country, for numerous county histories of England indicate that the name, spelled just as ADAM MOTT spelled his, was widely scattered there. The descendants of JAMES MOTT of this History, almost without exception, vigorously maintain that he was born in "Long Island," frankly acknowledging their inability to assign him to any recognized lines of the name. The single exception as vigorously asserts that he was a resident of New Rochelle, and either a member or the son of a member of the Huguenot colony there before his departure into the Dutchess County hills in 1762. This would seem to give color to the surmise that he was son of that James of Mamaroneck who married Jane Burling; and the fact that the recently erected Huguenot monument in New Rochelle bears the name of James Mott as a member of that community gives it additional weight. On the contrary, the Saratoga descendants, who have preserved the family records, deny the existence of any tradition in their midst that he ever lived at New Rochelle, or was identified with Huguenot interests or influences there.

The weight of evidence, such as it is, is in favor of the descent of "James Mott, Jr.," "of Hempstead," from ADAM, the Hempstead patriarch, through his son JOHN,<sup>2</sup> and grandson JAMES,<sup>3</sup> as has been outlined in these pages.

Revolution, stationed on the Hudson, in his home county, in skirmishes with the Tories. Later he was identified with the Friends in the Nine Partners Meeting, and their records are authority for his removal to Saratoga County, 14.9.1791.
